Police Using New Site to Identify Suspects

Lexington, SC (May 10, 2012, 10:00) – In an effort to help resolve criminal cases involving Identity Theft, Retail Theft, Credit Card Fraud and various other crimes, Lexington Police recently began using the internet website IDThisPerson.com.

IDThisPerson.com was created to assist Law Enforcement in identifying suspects or persons of interest related to criminal activity. Those helping identify subjects on the site can receive a $25 reward. Chief Terrence Green states "Often we have good surveillance video and photographs of the suspects but no way of identifying them. We are always looking for innovative ways to reach out to the public for their help in this modern age of the web and social networking." Images of unidentified suspects or persons of interest are added to the IDThisPerson.com website by Law Enforcement. The public can view these images and provide identifying information about the subjects in an anonymous format.

Every year there are billions of dollars in losses directly related to Theft. Citizens ultimately pay for these losses since costs are typically passed on to consumers. The Lexington Police Department encourages citizens to visit IDThisPerson.com to help ensure the success of this partnership.
